Although I was writing short stories all the time, I only published my first novel as an adult. It was, of course, a science fiction fantasy.

But stories are not just words. Not just images. I even make computer games because every-thing is a story.

That's why I also help others tell their own stories.

This is my art.

Although I started talking quite early, I learned to write when I was about 6 years old.

Before that, I used to draw, not just single drawings, but comics.

To this day, I often illustrate my stories myself and I love making comics. Nowadays I usually write them but there were times when I also drew, both shorts and long series.

The art of storytelling.

It captivated me from a very young age. Unreal, fantastic stories I could tell for hours.

When I was 11 or 12 years old, I started writing science fiction stories. At first, by hand. In high school, I got a typewriter, and I would sit in the kitchen at night, typing incredible tales.
