

Comfort is not being bound by absurd social obligations, a sense of guilt, and demands to conform. Comfort is being at ease with your own culture. Comfort is being respectful to others, but not being a slave of their views.

Being free is comfortable. And being free does not mean doing things you want to. It means not having to do things you don't want to do. Seek comfort, seek art, and support independent media. Look out for your local creators, read more zines, make more zines. Feel good.

Comfort is the freedom that a stable job gives you. The freedom to buy supplies, and spend money on paper, copier, inks, pencils, pens, and tons of other stuff you do not need, but they are fun. Comfort is knowing you can afford fun — not only in the financial dimension.

COMFORT

Having good enough conditions to make more than one zine a week for a year is a great comfort.

Having a non-toxic job is a great comfort. And it's good to look back, see yourself struggling and working jobs you hated, and be able to say it's a thing of the past now. Comfort is knowing, you can cope on the job market with your knowledge and experience.

Comfort is doing your art however you want. If you want it to be disturbing, the better, cause art's aim is to disturb. If you want it to be comforting, that's pretty fine, cause doing affirming zines instead of contesting ones is just as important.

Comfort is working fully remotely. Not wasting time on the commute. Instead, taking this pared life and using it to cook dinner every day, draw stuff, clean the house, make zines, and do some weight lifting in the garage.

Comfort is having two bathrooms in a home for four. Nothing beats not having to wait in the morning. Also having a bidet is both great for comfort and for health. Seriously, once you get one, you won't ever want to give it up.
